HAS THE PANDEMIC SIGNALLED THE END OF A FORMAL DRESS CODE?

In 2020, clothes sales plummeted by 25%, the largest annual drop since records began 23 years ago. Our diminishing need for new business attire was a contributing factor as we lounged in pjs and comfy clothes on Zoom calls rather than dressing to impress in person. As we return back to the office, will we see a renaissance of more formal business attire?

Having discussed this with the Office VIBES' team, it feels like it is almost a foreign concept to don high heels or a suit and tie. This isn't to say we're not dressing smartly but with flexible working practices now commonplace, employees are questioning the need for an office dress code and instead preferring to adopt more comfortable and functional outfits.

It's clear that the pandemic accelerated the long-standing discussion around whether business attire is still relevant. We may have started the Zoom calls making an effort but after a long period of lockdown, we wore what we wanted and were just as productive.

The power suit or dress once had a significance - a sign of professionalism - but the hybrid era will have fashion implications. Employees will need fewer office clothes and employers will focus on output. "I think people are going toward a more functional approach - what you get accomplished, not these formal rules about the number of hours you're in the office, or how exactly you're dressed," says Robert Pozen, senior lecturer at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

It is likely that your own personal dress code will depend on how often you are in the workplace and if the traditional business attire empowers you. A more modern attitude to workplace fashion will affect your budget, the amount of time it takes you to get ready in the morning and how your clothes make you feel. Some people will feel the need to dress up to achieve optimum performance and others will have a more relaxed mind set but what is clear is that productivity and professionalism don't need to come packaged in a suit. Who knows what the future holds...

2022 Office Trends

Covid has fundamentally changed the way we work and according to a report from the National Bureau of Economic Research, approximately 70% of companies will adopt a hybrid model where employees will split their time between the workplace and home. This change in working practices will have a major effect on workplace design; we've looked into our crystal ball to bring you the latest office trends for 2022.

Transformable Offices

Many businesses will no longer need expensive fixed sites or large offices. In 2022 convertible offices, where not every employee has a personal workspace, will be a trend. This will allow for a higher rotation of staff to come into the office and more space for meetings.

Noise Cancellation

With so many people used to their own quieter workspace at home, going back into the office may be noisy and unproductive. Next year will see companies creating quiet zones for concentrated work and meetings, whilst allocating other soft acoustic partitioned areas for small team brainstorming or catch up sessions.

Social Distancing Safety

Social distancing procedures will be introduced to keep employees and visitors safe. Examples of this include introducing touch sensors, facial recognition, contactless dispensers and improved ventilation as well as replacing doors with automatic ones.

More Like Home

2022 will say goodbye to more formal environments and create more comfortable workspaces with carpets, warm lighting, indoor plants, welcoming pictures and ergonomic furniture.

Green Office

A conscious consumer has emerged from the pandemic so businesses will focus on ensuring that their practices, products and interiors are environmentally friendly and natural. This has the added benefits of showing your customers you care and a positive effect on the mental and physical health of your employees and their performance.

The wellbeing of employees will be the priority in 2022, companies will make some supportive changes to ensure they feel safe, comfortable and at ease after a difficult working time.

THE BUSINESS STYLE GUIDE

When you think of workplace style, your first thought may be to think of fashion. Whilst what you wear is an important part of who and what you are as a business professional, so is the image your business projects.

A style guide is a set of rules for writing and design that helps everyone associated with the business to follow, creating one uniform message. It will define the look, feel, tone and style of all your content. You may think that this is similar to corporate or brand guidelines that lay out colour palettes, fonts and logo uses but a style guide goes one step further to include who your business is and who your audience are, your competitive advantage and specific elements such as punctuation, capitalisation, spelling and grammar.

This is especially important to avoid different employees using their own interpretations or computer software set up:

- Punctuation - must-have or must have
- Capitalisation - Office VIBES or Office Vibes
- Spelling - personalisation or personalization
- Grammar - affect/effect, who/whom or their/there

A style guide is a set of standards for clear, intelligent and professional communication that conveys exactly who your company is and what it wants to convey. It creates a concise document for all employees to harmonise a constant message to your audience.

Whether you want to create a fun, trendy or trustworthy, serious personality for your company, a style guide should communicate your mission statement, industry specific terminologies, registered trademarks, branding and design elements, rules for preferred company written formats and position you as the right company for your chosen audience. There are many templates available online to help you get started so you can really define your brand moving forward.

WHAT BUSINESS CAN LEARN FROM THE CATWALK

The fashion industry is a trillion dollar business and it influences our lives far more than we would ever consider. After the numerous glamorous fashion shows take place across the globe, what will hit the High Street and what we will be wearing in years to come has already been decided long before it appears on our radar.

The fashion industry sets trends, visions of some of the most creative people in the world and we follow. In the iconic Meryl Streep speech in The Devil Wears Prada, Miranda Priestly discusses the origins of trends, explaining to the clueless and indifferent Andy that the rather lumpy blue sweater she's wearing began with a cerulean Oscar de la Renta collection and "trickled on down onto some tragic Casual Corner where you no doubt fished it out of some clearance bin". The fashion industry decides what is in vogue and what isn't.

What we can learn in business from the catwalk is that people follow trends. Trends are powerful and persuasive, even if people are not fashionistas they are influenced by them. We are compelled by the press, social media, colleagues, friends and family to eat, dress, socialise and travel and follow what are deemed to be the latest trends. Even if you are categorical that you are a non-conformer, you will in some way be compelled by less materialistic trends such as working practices or reading books.

Trends affect our behaviour and behaviour forms culture. Whether you are trying to inspire change internally or loyalty with your customers, being seen to lead by being a trend-setter can have a massive effect on how people interact with you. Identify individuals or teams within your business who embody this type of thinking, champion their ideas and let them inspire others. Trends may come and go so instead of being a follower, think outside of the box and be an influencer.

Germ-Savvy™

A new range of Rapesco germ repellent products.

Rapesco has developed a product range to help improve hygiene wherever you are working. The Germ-Savvy™ antimicrobial agent is added to the external plastic parts during manufacture and provides protection for the lifetime of the product.

- Kills 99% of bacteria • No price premium • SGS / ISO approved

The work desk is often the worst affected when tested for bacteria. By adding silver and zinc ions to the plastics, germ cells cannot develop and the germ dies before it can spread.

Ho-Ho-Ho

It's Nearly Christmas!

Christmas was hardly merry or bright last year. Lockdown restrictions and high Covid cases meant that we didn't get to spend time with so many of our loved ones that we yearned for. This year, we can't wait for the festive merriments so here is our pick of things to do to make sure it really is the most wonderful time of the year.

Office VIBES Festive Picks!

BUY EARLY

At the time of writing, there is a huge surge in demand to buy Christmas presents and a fear of product shortages due to Brexit issues. Despite the warning not to panic buy, we would advise that if there is a must-have present you want to get that you buy early so not to miss out. With courier companies expecting it to be their busiest period ever, there is no time like the present to get shopping.

PLAN AHEAD

We know, it is easier said than done but being organised pays off. Book your Christmas supermarket slot, hairdresser appointment and travel tickets now to avoid disappointment and price hikes.

BUDGETING

Given that last Christmas was a disappointment, the urge to splurge this year is a big one. Many retailers are already selling Christmas presents, cards, decorations and essentials so you can spread the costs over the next 3 months rather than in one big hit.

FAMILY TIME

Christmas can be stressful at the best of times so this year so, try and make it all about your loved ones. Make home made cards, bake with your family, decorate the tree together, visit Christmas Fairs with friends and revel at every party that you are invited to.

Black
FRIDAY

Top Tips!

Black Friday falls on 26th November and it promises to be the one of the busiest shopping days of the year. With so many deals, special offers and huge discounts available, how do you make the most of grabbing a bargain? Our Black Friday handy tips will have you shopping like a pro.

Plan Ahead

Last year the pandemic forced many Black Friday deals online and it is likely to be the same this year. It would be prudent to do your research towards the end of October as companies like Amazon started their sales at the beginning of November. Many media sites will advise on the best buys, especially on big ticket items.

Cashback Sites

There are many cashback sites out there such as Top Cashback and Quidco that pay you for shopping through them. It is worth seeing what offers they have if you are shopping online as there can be savings and cashback offers not to be missed, to enjoy on top of the Black Friday deals

Get Alerts

If you've got an eye on something specific, make sure you have the latest App and are signed up to the company's email newsletter. This will alert you to the latest offers, coupons and early bird deals so you don't miss out. You may be able to get loyalty rewards points too as an added bonus.

In Store

If you are planning to visit a store and shop till you drop, the most sought after bargains often sell out early. Check out the store opening times, nearby car parking and social distancing measures so that there are no delays to your journey and that you are at the front of the queue.

Compare Prices

It is easy to be swept away with the lure of huge discounts but make sure you track and compare prices. Do your homework, know the starting price of the product you want to buy and compare retailers to ensure you get the very best deal. Prices may change daily so keep your eye out.

Don't Forget Cyber Monday

Although historically Black Friday is the most popular shopping day, don't forget that there are still some incredible deals to be found on Cyber Monday, especially on computing. Don't despair if you couldn't get what you wanted initially as there will be still be many irresistible bargains to be had on Monday.

A little moment of joy...

Best Practices for a Whiteboard Session

Whiteboards have been ever-present in our working lives for many, many years for presentations and brainstorming sessions. Whilst they are easy to use, are you taking full advantage of the presenting, collating and collaborating benefits they offer? A whiteboard presentation asks for active contribution and promotes engaged listening with a visual aid that makes information easier to absorb and retain.

HOW TO LEAD A WHITEBOARD SESSION

KEEP THE PARTICIPANTS FOCUSED

Whiteboard sessions can result in some great ideas and often the magic happens when participants feel comfortable enough to contribute. In brainstorming sessions, no idea is a bad idea; all thoughts are valid. When you lead a whiteboard session, make sure there is no judgement of the ideas that arise. Write down everything as what may be deemed to be a bad idea, could turn out to be a good one. Encourage conversation and as many ideas as possible, quantity is better than quality as all ideas can be reviewed after the meeting - the most important thing is that your team has bought into the process.

SET UP A SPACE FOR ROGUE IDEAS

It is more than likely that your whiteboard session will go off on tangents so create a space for ideas that come up that aren't project related. This allows you to keep discussions on track and not interfere with the goals of the session but also not forgetting what could be a genius idea for the future. Set aside some time at the end of the meeting to delete anything that wasn't relevant and record any good ideas and schedule them for a future meeting.

USE VISUALS AS WELL AS TEXT

Over 60% of Generation X and Millennials says they would collaborate more through visual means. Words are great but visual representations can be more effective for keeping people's attention as they are easier to recall. They don't have to be works of art but icons, maps and pictures are brilliant for creating, managing and visualising ideas.

ORGANISE YOUR WHITEBOARD EFFECTIVELY

In order that your whiteboard doesn't become a clutter of ideas and thoughts, you need to make sure there is some logic to what you write.

- Put the objective of the meeting at the top of the board in capital letters
- Headlines are great for organising your information and act as a reference point
- Write big ideas in large writing and sub points in smaller lettering
- Draw conclusions on a separate space so people leave the meeting with a defined set of actions
