AGE Matters

Many companies prioritise their recruitment policy on attracting young people but is silver the new gold when it comes to employing the older generation?

The traditional 9-5 is a distant memory, hybrid working is the new norm and the proportion of older workers is increasing. According to The Platinum Pound Report, older workers (classed as 50 and over) make up one third of the UK workforce and this will continue to grow in the coming years given the country's ageing population. The report also states that there are over 800,000 older people who are currently out of work but who want a job so is it time to rethink your recruitment strategy to harness talent regardless of age?

An article by LinkedIn says "Different generations bring diverse perspectives and experiences to the workplace. Older employees can share their wisdom and institutional knowledge, while younger employees can contribute fresh ideas and technological expertise. This knowledge exchange fosters innovation and problem-solving." A multigenerational workforce offers different perspectives and viewpoints, different attitudes and communication styles, a wealth of experience in all aspects of life, a broad range of knowledge and abilities and a wide range of skills to deliver rewarding diversity and inclusion for your business.

The older generation might be slower to adopt new technologies but they have life experiences that the younger generation are still yet to enjoy. Depending on a worker's stage of life, your company can benefit from different experiences of work, education, family, health, money, challenges, setbacks and important decisions. If you want your product, brand or service to appeal to a wider audience, you could reap the rewards of a multigenerational workforce. There are many papers written that provide evidence that workers of all ages broadly value the same things so they should be invested in collaborative success.

An all-inclusive workforce, that embraces all ages could be the key to success to harnessing talent in your workforce. Negative attitudes towards older workers can be a barrier to hiring but if you can move past the stereotypes with a flexible workforce policy, you will leverage the unique strengths of each generation for an engaged company that supports and learns from each other.

GREEN FATIGUE

GREENWASHING

Going green is big business and sustainability talks. Every smart business is employing green marketing tactics and why wouldn't they as the State of Consumer Spending: Gen Z Shoppers Demand Sustainable Retail Report reveals that 62% of Gen Z shoppers prefer to buy from sustainable brands, and a staggering 73% are willing to pay more for sustainable products. Moreover, Gen Z and Millennials are the most likely to make purchase decisions based on personal, social, and environmental values. As torchbearers of conscious consumers, the younger generation offer a great opportunity for companies to show they care, protect future generations and make healthy profit margins.

Unfortunately, some businesses have exploited the genuinely good intentions of many companies by using the practice of greenwashing which has led to green fatigue where consumers have become disengaged and skeptical of the promises being made. Greenwashing is the process of conveying a false impression or misleading information about the sustainable credentials of a product, brand or service. The unsubstantiated claims are there to make you believe that products are more environmentally sound than they actually are; green coloured packaging, brand designed logos that are not accredited, claims of being made from recycled materials without the exact content being stated and ambiguous net zero pledges are just a few examples. We've all been duped by them and we are all victims.

For many businesses these misleading claims are inadvertent and are due to a misunderstanding of how to promote their credentials correctly. Fortunately, the Competition and Markets Authority (CMA) is clamping down on companies making inaccurate or false environmental claims and who gain an unfair advantage as a result. Their current Green Claims Code sets out six principles specifying that environmental claims must:

- Be truthful and accurate
- Be clear and unambiguous
- Not omit or hide material information
- Only make fair and meaningful comparisons
- Consider the full lifecycle of the product or their service
- Be substantiated

There are impending plans this year for the CMA to have the power to decide if an environmental claim is misleading and fine companies up to 10% of their global turnover without the need to go to court.

This is designed to promote transparency and authenticity in corporate sustainability to protect the future of our planet and to ensure consumers are able to make informed purchasing choices.

Greenwashing - inadvertent or not - may have been profitable in the past but could turn out to be very costly in the future. Now is the time to reassess your sustainable strategies and only make substantiated and verified claims. Your green marketing must be true and accountable to build trust in your sustainable products, brands and services. It is the correct and ethical practice to follow and will reshape the narrative around responsible products and businesses being held accountable for their true impact on the environment.

THE HUMAN TOUCH

If you research business trends for 2024, the number one topic is that AI will make a profound impact on the way we conduct business. For those of us who struggle with the TV remote control and using Apps on our smartphone, this is a scary thought.

AI technology such as ChatGPT is simply too convincing for businesses to ignore with the Boston Consulting Group reporting that “to be an industry leader in five years, you need a clear and compelling generative AI strategy today.” To reassure you, AI has been making waves for more than a decade and it is likely that you use it on a daily basis without even realising it on social media, facial recognition, filters, banking and chatbots.

According to Forbes “Generative AI puts the power to create and intelligently automate the customer experience - as well as internal operations - in the hands of nearly every organisation.” The UK held the first global AI Safety Summit last year and secured a new agreement that like-minded Governments would be able to test eight leading tech companies’ AI models before they are released to ensure safety.

If this has created visions of you being replaced by a robot, fear not as people still remain the most important asset any business has. AI can only learn from the information with which it is fed so the human touch - experience, knowledge and empathy - are irreplaceable.

The personal emotions that we display in our everyday business interactions cannot be replicated. The trust, authenticity, pleasure, excitement, frustration, disappointment, sympathy, anger, laughter and tears that we convey builds rapport, long-lasting relationships and connections. We instinctively assess and respond to people, situations and challenges; we react to body language, non-verbal gestures and tones to draw upon our own experiences to allow us to respond in the appropriate way. We gather innate knowledge of our colleagues and customers to provide a unique response, the human touch is simply not possible for any technology to mimic.

There is no doubt that rapid technological advancements will affect virtually every job role in the future but forward thinking businesses are embracing automation and encouraging advanced social skills in their workforce, the softer skills that the likes of AI can’t do so well. As the nature of work evolves communication, leadership, teamwork, problem solving and emotional intelligence will become required talents of those looking to succeed as these skills will bridge the gap that technology can’t provide. Keep being you, you offer distinctive qualities that technology can’t learn, hone your soft skills and you’ll thrive in a world increasingly shaped by AI and technology.

THE COST OF A FAVOUR

Research from Capital on Tap shows that small businesses are losing out on up to £43,000 a year by doing favours for friends, family and clients. They also reported that UK business owners are asked to work at discounted rates on average 75 times per year.

The survey revealed:

- The healthcare industry offered an average discount rate of £428.80, leading them to lose over £42,000 per year in revenue
- The property management and development industry revealed that they provide an average discounted rate of £315.40, equating to over £11,500 per year
- The businesses equipment and services industry lose over £21,500 every year

Discounted rates are not uncommon for small businesses who are looking to win new contracts or who want to secure additional business in quieter times. As experts in their fields, they are often asked for free professional advice but when this stops being the exception and becomes the norm, it can be extremely costly. Salaried employees get paid regardless of the time they spend working or how productive they are but for business owners every minute and every penny counts.

Small businesses offer specialist and often unique services that add value to your business so if a favour is absolutely necessary be conscious of the time they are sacrificing and price they are paying to do it. You could return the favour by writing them a great review, share their social media posts to a wider audience, improve their trading terms or introduce them to new clients.

Doing favours for friends and family is not unusual. Think of a hairdresser or a beauty therapist giving their friends a makeover, a designer creating wedding invitations for family or a plumber popping over on their way home from work to fix a leak. If you are asking for a favour, the likelihood is that so are many others. Be considerate to the fact that your friend or family member has a life outside of work and wants to switch off at the end of the day or at the weekend just as you do. Be alert to the fact that if they are doing you a favour during working hours, it is probably costing them in some way.

Time is money to small businesses so where possible, avoid asking for too many favours and try to recompense them in some way if you do. Remember, a favour goes both ways.

Productivity

There are those very special days when you feel like a superhero when it comes to getting tasks and projects done at work and then there are those days when nothing seems to go right and you want to dive head first under the duvet until tomorrow. Here are some interesting insights into productivity.*

1. 84% of us procrastinate

A survey from Micro Biz Mag showed that 84% of people are affected by the productivity killing plague that is... procrastination. If you're putting off those tasks and finding literally anything else to do, you're in good company.

2. Early morning is the most productive time of day for 44% of employees

A 2019 study which surveyed 2,800 workers in America found that 44% cited early mornings as their most productive time of day.

3. A further 31% said late mornings are their most productive time

Almost a third in the same study said late mornings is when they get the most done.

4. Morning is the best time to work

For 75% of employees, their most productive time of day is the morning.

5. Just 2% are particularly productive after work or late at night

Only 2% of respondents said they work at their best after hours, perhaps burning the midnight oil isn't such a good thing.

6. The least productive day of the week is Friday

This one might not come as a surprise but the same study also found that people are at their least productive on a Friday. Just 11% of respondents said they're most productive on a Friday compared with 29% on a Monday and 27% on a Tuesday.

7. 90% of people admit to wasting time at work

The overwhelming majority – 90% – of employees admit to wasting time on the clock, a little surprising that 10% say they never do. Surely they are guilty of checking phone messages or having a sneaky peek on social media?

8. The average office worker spends 5 hours a week in meetings

That's an average of an hour a day so it's no wonder they are not always at their most productive.

9. They're also spending 4 hours a week preparing for meetings

That's 9 hours a week lost to meetings, the equivalent of more than one day per week, not getting on with your own personal to-do-list.

10. The ideal working day is 6 hours

Some research now suggests that the ideal working day should be 6 hours as opposed to 8 in order to maximise productivity.

11. Productivity falls off sharply after 48 working hours in a week

A Stanford study found that productivity almost disappears after 48 working hours in a week. So excessive extra hours really aren't that productive at all.

12. Denmark has the shortest working week but is one of the most productive countries in the world

Denmark has the shortest working week of 37.2 hours, yet they are the third most productive country.

13. Norway performs well too

Norway's working week is just 38 hours, the third lowest in the world, but the Scandinavian nation is ranked the 5th most productive country.

13. We believe we're productive for less than 3 hours per day

A survey found that the average time that UK workers believe they're actually productive for during a working day is just 2 hours and 53 minutes.

14. Poor sleep can kill employee productivity

Poor sleep or insufficient sleep results directly in lost productivity. A good excuse to head to bed early to feel refreshed for the next working day.
